talking with the Seattle team about it, and I'm very interested in the economics of the city," Silver said at the time. The conversation about moving the NBA to Seattle has intensified

after last season,
when the Seattle Times reported that the city of Portland
had kicked the tires on the idea. In October, a report out of the Seattle Times noted that discussions with the city were intensifying.

According to the report, Mayor Jenny Durkan floated the idea of Seattle as the league's third franchise in January. It was only the latest attempt by the city's leaders to get serious about relocating the NBA. The idea has been floated in recent years by former mayor Mike McGinn, as well as former mayor Greg Nickels. "The city has been talking with the NBA about a plan to bring a team to the city, possibly in the West, for decades," former mayor Mike McGinn told the Times in 2016. "We are confident there are several factors that can bring a team to Seattle. "It could be an NBA team, it could be an NHL team or it could be a soccer team." The potential for the NBA in Seattle has not been lost on the Portland Trail Blazers.

According to a report by the Oregonian's

Michael Scotto,
general manager Neil Olshey and his team did not put much effort into courting an NBA team in 2016,
when the Kings
moved to Seattle.
Now, however,
Olshey is prepared to aggressively pursue the idea of moving the Trail Blazers to Seattle. "We are doing our due diligence and we are excited by the market," Olshey told the Oregonian in an interview.
