And most of them suck. This isn't because Steam has a lot of terrible games, it's because game demos are just inherently terrible. They're essentially a preview, not a demo. This is something I actually discussed briefly in How to Choose a Game Without Playing It, but it's worth going over again. And I think the exact same argument applies to Steam's far larger game demo library. If you want to play a game, go buy a copy. Here's the basic principle, if you want to play a game, go buy a copy. It's not only better for the game, it's better for you. When it comes to demos, a game comes with a certain package, which is a combination of game, gameplay and developer. Dota 2, for example, is $30. It's $30
