Dec 4, 2019 An actuator is typically mounted on the underside of the slider and a spring is placed between the slider and the actuator. When the slider is lowered, it compresses the spring and presses the actuator, causing the actuator to rotate. The actuator and spring tend to dampen the movement of the slider, which lowers the risk of "jerky" movement. If the actuator and spring fail, the slider will not move or may not move at all.
