The ruling was seen as a major step towards ending more than half a century of rule under the communist Vietnamese Communist Party (VCP) and clearing the way for a new government to be formed. President Tran Dai Quang had warned that any decision to hold elections before the country's 2016 constitution is approved by voters could undermine his authority. The ruling, published in the newspaper HaNoi-based Tuoi Tre on Monday, said the National Assembly elections would be held on March 29. "While the return to the general elections process requires certain procedures, they are not expected to be complex," it said. Vietnam will need to quickly set up an independent electoral body, with the VCP and the ruling Communist Party expected to ensure their candidates win uncontested seats, the paper said. The ruling said the Communist Party's Politburo, a decision-making body, was the only 2d92ce491b
