Lambert – the small US air carrier that owns Europe’s largest independent aircraft lessor, Lufthansa Aviation – is to launch services between major US cities and London from summer 2016. The new service, which will start with four flights a week, is set to run from New York and will include direct flights from Chicago and San Francisco to London Stansted. It will be operated by Lufthansa’s subsidiary Eurowings, which is also bidding to start services to New York from the UK capital. The routes will be managed by Lufthansa’s flight operations in Houston. “We are planning for multiple starting services during the year 2016,” said Lufthansa Group CEO Carsten Spohr. “Lufthansa’s European Aviation Service will handle the operations, with focus on the continuous expansion of its portfolio. With the same team, including the same fleet, Eurowings will
