With arrays in JavaScript, the following works fine: `var foo = ['a', 'b', 'c']; var bar = foo[1];` or `var foo = ['a', 'b', 'c']; var bar = foo.length;` But if I do this: `var foo = ['a', 'b', 'c']; var bar = *foo;` I get `Uncaught SyntaxError: Invalid or unexpected token.` I understand why that happens, but I'm interested in creating a compiler that would allow me to "dereference" a variable (thus giving me the value contained within it, not a reference to its value). For example, assume I have a data structure that looks like this: `foo = [0, 1, 2]` `bar = *foo;` I want the value of `bar` to be 0. How can I do that in JavaScript? A: The problem you are experiencing is that you have over-specified the type of `bar`. `var bar = *foo;` `foo` is a javascript array, so your dereferencing is looking for `bar` to be of type array. Since `bar` is of type string, it doesn't work. Use `var bar = *(foo[0]);` instead. You can also do `var bar = foo[0];` and avoid dereferencing the array entirely. A: You have to dereference the array first to get the first element of the array: `var foo = ['a', 'b', 'c']; var bar = *foo[0];` // `bar` is now: 'a' `SET `default_character_set` = 'utf8'` `DROP TABLE IF EXISTS `metacode`;` `CREATE TABLE `metacode` (`id` int(11) NOT NULL auto_increment, `acronym` varchar(20) NOT NULL default`
