You can select the number of threads used for the encoding process, the audio and video codecs you want to use for the conversion process, and you can also select your desired frame rate and compression. Once you are ready, you must choose your file to convert. You can either import it from a location on your computer, or you can drag it onto the preview window. The media can also be dragged-and-dropped into the preview window. You can preview the original file and the conversion using the preview window. You can toggle between the preview window and the conversion window. The settings are already saved in a queue. You can add or remove items in the queue. You can also edit the conversion settings. You can preview the settings by clicking on the tick mark in the right of the queue. You can also convert or cancel the queue. You can download the converted files to your hard drive by selecting the directory where you want to save the file.
