New printers are no different and most printers today support LAN printing either through LAN emulation or via a direct connection. The best Cyberprinter Shop now for Cyberprinter and other Office solutions at Office Depot. Find low prices on all kinds of Office supplies and equipment including Laser Printers, 3D Printers, Office Equipment and more. Cyberprinter software first started in the DOS era. Nowadays, it is much more convenient to use a desktop shortcut to that application, but the browser exists, so why not use it to access printers on your network as well? In this article, I will show you a simple way to connect to a network printer or Cloud printer over the internet using your web browser. Trick to Do Network Printing over the Internet All it takes to do this is to install a web server on your computer and create a desktop shortcut to that URL and that's it. In the following example, I will create a simple Windows shortcut to a URL that points to a printer on my home network. [...] On the left hand side, under Default Programs, you have a section called Other Devices. This is where you can add printers, scanners, and other devices on your computer. Click on the Add button at the top. Here, we want to enter the device that is connected to the LAN (local area network) and the printer to use, which is our HP LaserJet 4130 printer. The device to be added is the best way to refer to a local printer, but it could also be a local scanner or anything that you can add to your computer. Create a shortcut to your computer's web server To add this printer, click on Customize in the upper left corner of the Windows Explorer window. When the tab pops up, click on the Add button. In the box that appears, enter a name for the shortcut. This will then become a new item in your folder and the name of this shortcut will be YourComputerNameHere. Since we are using a printer on our home network, we need to know where to find it. Our printer is connected to the router that we have on our network. So, on your web browser, connect to 192.168.1.1, where you can see a list of computers on your network, including your web server. Click on the name of the computer that has your web server installed on it. Here, you will see the printer that you have added
