
path from the lateral epicondyle to the lateral part of the forearm. Both branches have a common trunk between the metacarpal bones and form a common cutaneous tunnel from the lateral end of the forearm to the lateral aspect of the first web space. This tunnel was dissected and the associated structures at the first web space were examined. A nerve originating from the posterior interosseous nerve that passed through the coracobrachialis, trapezoid, and extensor carpi radialis brevis muscles and emerging from the lateral epicondyle of the humerus was examined. In the first web space, the superficial branch of the LABCN ran on the superficial fascia 595f342e71
