

This is the first time that motion capture technology is being used in the video game industry. The new "HyperMotion" captures the raw movements of the real players, and builds them into the visuals. As the player moves, his or her movements are captured and recreated on the screen. The new motion capture process is being used on a number of the core gameplay systems. The "Player Impact Engine" for instance can detect when the player is tackled, adjusting his or her movements to reflect exactly where the tackle took place. The player will be more stable and more accurate in passing. We've always made sure to work closely with FIFA's broadcasting partners, and I'm very happy to see this new approach supporting our programming. As much as we have always strived to capture the speed of the game, this next-generation technology will turn the action from the football pitch into a full-on fight that is broadcast in real time. Screening of biomarkers of oxidative stress in dextran sulfate sodium-induced murine acute colitis. An alternative approach to drug development is the discovery of a putative drug by screening a collection of small molecules called "set-aside" or "libraries." In the present study we analyzed the transcriptome of colonic mucosa from dextran sulfate sodium (DSS)-treated mice and evaluated our ability to find suitable markers of oxidative stress. We determined the relative level of transcripts encoding cytochrome P450 (CYP) enzymes using real-time RT-PCR. CYP2E1 is the main contributor to reactive oxygen species (ROS) generation in the colon, and the transcription factor NF-E2-related factor 2 (Nrf2) is a cellular mediator of the cellular response against oxidative stress. We developed a group of single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) for the CYP2E1 and Nrf2 genes and typed them in the C57BL/6 mice. We analyzed the transcriptome from the colonic mucosa of DSS-treated mice using an integrated microarray and high-throughput sequencing analysis. In total, 28 differentially expressed (de-regulated) genes were successfully identified in the colon of DSS-treated mice. CYP2E1 and Nrf2 were the main contributors to the expression of several other transcripts. We validated the expression of CYP2E1, Nrf2 and glutamate-cysteine ligase
