Who Will Volunteer? Not Who Will Appear On A Diversity Online Training When it comes to a top-down initiative that looks at increasing the representation of non-traditional members of our industry, I'd love to see experts within our larger industry respond to the growing demand that they make themselves available to teach online programs, while maintaining their self-identified roles. Unfortunately, to date, we've only seen a handful of well-known luminaries respond to the call, and that's troubling. Our industry has been able to effect positive change because of the efforts of high-profile individuals. Whether it's one or two of these individuals, they have become the industry's teaching heroes – an example that informs how the rest of us look at diversity and inclusion. What's the point of doing something differently when we've had the same cadre of leaders championing diversity and inclusion? To be honest, we've made great progress because of those educators who offered to share their extensive knowledge with everyone. Where do we go from here? While certainly not all or even the vast majority of our industry's luminaries will step up, we have an obligation to the industry and our continued success to create an environment that leads to positive change. So, before another couple of women and African-Americans jump into the fray, I'm going to ask: Who will volunteer? Let's remember that, if we are committed to change, someone had to be the first in the industry to step up and do something. And while one visionary did step up, I believe that we need more than one to take this on. So, if you're ready to do something, please step forward. You do not have to be a high-profile individual in order to make a difference in our industry. If you're in the space that I write about on a regular basis, particularly in regards to diversity and inclusion, I would love to hear from you if you're willing to step up and mentor individuals who are interested in learning more, as well as help mentor others. I'm interested in hearing what you're willing to do. In the meantime, I want to hear from individuals interested in bringing their own information and insights to the table. You can share that here. The great thing about this shot is it really shows a number of things, with a nice morning sunrise. We can see the reflection of the sun on the water behind the boat, in the big clouds, and the big lily pad is a reflection in the water. We can also see the main light is in the upper left hand corner because of the clouds, and the shadows are cast from the sun on the big lily pad, and the smaller lily pad is in a shadow. To see the edges of this bright image, see this tutorial. I started with only 30% highlights and 30% midtones, and when all the adjustments were done, I applied a bit more adjustment to bring down the overall brightness a touch. Once the highlights were really bright, I turned down the overall brightness a bit more. It was interesting to see the large highlights of the main light were so bright that the "separation" was mostly gone. In order to get more contrast, I applied adjustment, and boosted the midtones and shadows, so that the main light was darker, and the boat and boat dock were brighter. The boat dock is a good target for a large subject. The large subject has an image of its own here, and the boat is a fine focus-filling subject. When I work on fine focus images, I always notice how the subject is in some kind of a shadow, and then I use it to my advantage by getting a perfect background. now (I've got a part time job as a TA/TAed) and I don't plan on pursuing any further education (I don't need that $150K to do it). I'd love to contribute as I can. I'm presently teaching a class on Introduction to Judaism for the first time and feel like I can contribute in that in a positive way. My question is what is "accepted" and what is "typical"? I'd just like to feel like I'm contributing to a good cause. It's a blessing to help. You won't ever be exploited; that's not how the justice system works. You are not a "guru" here. The fact that we are together gives you a chance to help, to teach others, even if it's only one person. We all benefit. And just because you are willing to volunteer time and expertise doesn't make you a guru. There is no one who has the required combination of dedication, interest
